Solving the Biggest Challenges in HigherEd Academic Processes

At our recent webinar, we asked attendees to share the biggest challenge they face in their academic processes. 27% said their top concern was that faculty members don't always feel included in decision-making and don't know how decisions are made. Countless colleges and universities struggle with outdated, manual academic planning processes—but there are tools that can help.

The Burden of Faculty Activity Reporting

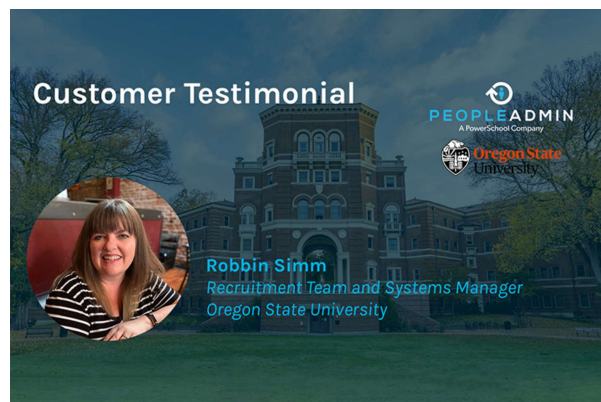

What does a day in the life of a faculty member at your institution look like? It might not be what you expect. Studies show that the average professor spends 30% of their time on email and meetings, and that time has continued to increase since 2020. So when the core of academic work should be teaching, research, and service, why are admin tasks (like faculty activity reporting) taking up so much time—and what can you do about it?

Why Digitization Makes a Difference

Digitization can make a huge difference in attracting talent to your institution. The HigherEd hiring process is historically slow and difficult. Many institutions have non-digitized, non-centralized hiring processes –and that can seriously impact the talent your institution attracts. To help you think about the impact of speeding up your hiring process, hear from internal PeopleAdmin expert Ircka West.
